INFANT NAVY OF AMERICA.

Let there be a Fleet—and there is a Fleet!
[Acts of the Fed. Legis.

[EXTRACT THE SECOND.]

"THE accounts of the British Navy are but few until the reign of Henry the Eighth, (1509-47) A. but as the office of Admiral, was established so early as the reign of Edward the First (1272, 1307) and perhaps of John (1199, 1216) and we find Fitz Allen appointed Admiral of England by Richard the Second (1377-99) and Spelman hath given us a list of Admirals from Henry the Third (1216-72) we may infer that our princes had some ships of their own, besides the occasional ones furnished by the Cinque Ports. B.

"The first instance I know of, and that a curious one, as it mentions cannon employed on board a ship, occurs in Rymer's FOEDERA, vol. VIII. p. 447. It is an order to Henry Somer, keeper of the private wardrobe in the Tower, to deliver to Mr. Loveney, treasurer of Queen Philippa, Queen of Sweeden, Denmark, and Norway, who was then sent by her uncle Henry the Fourth (1399, 1413) to her husband in the ship called the Queen's Hall, the following military stores: 11 guns, 40 libras pulveris pro gunnes, 40 petras pro gunnes, 40 tampons, 4 touches, 1 mallet, 2 fire pans, 40 pavys, 24 bows, 40 sheaves of arrows, pro stuffura ejusdem navis, ordinata pro cula ejusdem Reginæ.

"Henry the Fifth (1413-22) at his first invasion of France (1415) appears to have have had two large and beautiful ships of his own, with purple sails, the one called the King's Chamber, the other his Hall. Edward the Fourth (1461-83) had several ships of his own, which he employed sometimes in war, and often for trade, in which he dealt largely.

"It appears from Mr. Canning's monument it Redcliff church at Bristol, that he at one time furnished this prince with 2470 tons of shipping to purchase his peace, among wh ch were the Mary and John of 900 tons, and the Mary Radcliffe of 500 tons, being two of the largest ships belonging to any Englishman in that early period, that I know of, though many of that size, and larger, are to be found among the Genoese and Venetians at that time. C.

"In 1481, he issued the following order: "Rex dilecto, sibi Richardo Symondes, magistro navis, nostræ vocatæ Le Grace de Dieu, salutem. (It should be, La Grace de Dieu). 'Cum nos quandam cormatam potentiam ad proficiscendum supra mare in resistentium illius infidelis et antiqui inimici nostri regis Scotorum ordinavimus, assignavimus te ad tot marinarios quot pro gubernatione et conductione navis prodictæ necessarii fuerint et opportune, ubicunque inveniri poterunt, tam infra libertates quam extra, arestandum et capiendum, et eos in nave prædicta, nobis ad vada nostra deservituros, ponendum et poni faciendum.

"Consimiles literæ regis patentes diriguntur personis subscriptis sub eadem da-a, viz. Roberto Michelson magistro navis regis vocatæ de Henry; Richardo Hubbard, magistro navis regis de Anthony; Johanni Stevens magistro navis regis vocatæ le Great Portingale, Johanni Hamond magistro navis regis le Spagnard; Waltero Cokkee magistro navis regis, vocatæ le Henry Ashe; and to five other commanders who had not ships belonging to the King, but seem to have been hired. Rymer Vol. XII. p. 139.—N. B. we find that pressing of seamen for the King's service was practised at this time perhaps even earlier. "It appears that our ships were now built larger; for in the earlier stages of them I am apt to suspect they were much smaller, and even consisted, for the most part, of single decked vessels, with one mast only. In the famous Armada of Edward the fourth (1475) though it consisted of 1100 vessels, the men on board them were only 11,166, very little more than 10 men per vessel; and though in the proportion of those furnished by London, we find them a little bigger, they do not exceed 16 men per vessel, even in that class."

* "A few Notes (says the Editor) are subjoined from other Authors, where there seemed any doubt or difficulty." (these are referred to here, by small capitals, alphabetically. Each of those I have added, is included in a parenthesis; as are the periods at which every reign commenced and closed; or on which any naval event happened. It is essential to have these dates present to the mind, in tracing the chronological progress of the Object before us; and as every reader of a Newspaper may not recollect them with due precision, nor have a regal table at hand, I shall be pardoned for the additions I have made.)

A. The Danes, say the Saxon Chronicles, never failed to visit England once a year for the sake of plunder. In 852 they came up the Thames with 350 ships, and having nothing to oppose them, they landed near London. They were not content to ravage the country, but attacked the town, pillaging and spreading desolation, till the time of Alfred the Great (872-900) who in 876 equipped a good fleet to engage them at sea.

B. For which services they had many privileges granted by Royal charter in many of the preceding reigns, the greatest part of which they still enjoy. (Under the article "Cinque Ports," in the Court Calendar, will be seen their military establishment at large. In the List of the Commons of England, we find 16 Barons as their Representatives; for Hastings, Rye, Winchelsea and Seaford; in Sussex; Sandwich, Dover, New-Romney and Hythe, in Kent.)

C. Through whose ports all the spices and rich treasures of the East came into Europe. Vide Robertson's History of India.

LONDON, October 2.

Extract of a letter from capt. James Sontar, of the ship Ellis, belonging to this port, to his owners, dated Barbadoes, July 3.

"Since our first arrival on the coast we have constantly been alarmed with the report of a French squadron. On the 24th of May, lying at Bassa, we were informed by a schr. from Siera Leon, that a French squadron were actually at the Isles de Los. We concluded our best means of escaping was to endeavor to get to the northward of them—lay into Sherbro, and procure farther intelligence from Sierra Leon, with our boats looking out on both sides. A few hours after we sailed from Bassa; the Pilgrim in company with two small ones, and appeared to make a signal. We kept under the land to prevent them seeing us, concluding they were the squadron. Next day came to anchor at Massurado, in expectation they had passed to leeward. The night after a crew came from Bassa, told us that a two decked ship with 40 guns had taken the Young Ralph and St. Philip, off Carrow, and was coming up after us.—We immediately got under way in company with the St. Anne, Pilgrim and Joshua and stood out three days; came back to Messurado again, went from thence to Cape Mount, and on the 30th May, lying at Cape Mount, saw a large ship coming from the southward; made the signal to the St. Anne to get under way immediately. The Pilgrim having a copy of our signals, got under way also.

"As soon as the St. Anne came up, I took my station astern of her, finding it was impossible for her to escape if I left her, thinking better to risque an action, than bear the name of run-a-way, the Pilgrim being a long way astern, shortened sail for her to come up. The French frigate (as I was afterwards informed by capt. Mentor, who was unfortunately captured by her) was called the Convention, capt. Roscow, two months from Dunkirk, carries 32 guns, and 209 men, had taken four ships. She bore down on the St. Anne and Ellis, and commenced a brisk fire, which we returned with all the strength we were masters of. After a little, finding us rather stronger than she expected, she filled, I suppose, with an intention to rake the St. Anne. I immediately filled and shot a-head of the St. Anne, to leeward and met her, being little more than a good musket shot apart, and received her broadside, being well prepared to pay her for her trouble. She finding our shot heavier than she expected, made sail in a greater hurry than she took it in. My running rigging being very much cut, she got out of reach of my guns, before I could set my top gallant sails, chased him till dark, then wore round, and joined the St. Anne who was a long way astern."

October 6.

Extract of a letter from captain Ball, of his majesty's ship Alexander, dated Bequier Road, Mouth of the Nile.

"Before this reaches you, you will have heard of the battle of the Nile, for the particulars of which I refer to sir Horatio Nelson's public letter. I only received a slight wound by a musket ball taking a piece of flesh from my left cheek, which will leave a small scar. My ship was engaged within pistol shot of L'Orient when she caught fire, after which I increased my distance from her, but could not get far enough to avoid the dreadful effects of her explosion. She set fire to my ship in four places, and nothing but the most wonderful exertions extricated us from that perilous state.

"My ship has received so much damage, that I have not a doubt but she will be in England in two or three months. With respect to our action I shall only observe, that the admiral and captains had a good opinion of each other before the battle, and now we are more attached than ever. Every one exerted himself alike.

"The captains have each subscribed 30l. for the Widows and Orphans of those who fell so gloriously on the first of August; and the admiral has joined, by giving 100l. The captains have likewise subscribed 20l. a piece for the purchase of a sword to be presented to sir Horatio Nelson. We intend to establish an Egyptian Club, to commemorate the Glorious First of August."

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 20.

We are searching still after French republicans, who are carried as prisoners into the palais of the French consulship, guarded by 100 Janissaries. Those Frenchmen which were at Adrianople and Rodosto, were all transported to this place, and confined in the aforesaid palais.

In that port, as also in all the harbors of the Levant, orders have been issued to sequester all French merchandize and property, which has every where been done. The commissioner Ruffin, the two interpreters, Danton and Franchini, Fleuzat; the secretaries Tiffer & Tidoux—and General Menan, who formerly was in the service of this government, have all been arrested, and thrown into the prison of the Lower Towers.

FRANKFORT, Oct. 9.

We have just received the pleasing intelligence, that a number of the French troops are on the point of leaving their position on the right side of the Rhine. This movement is accredited, and we believe has already taken place; as the head-quarters of the French have removed from Friedberg towards Wetzlar; and the number of French troops on this side the Rhine, may not exceed 10,000 men; but notwithstanding these favourable appearances, our government will preserve its warlike attitude, as there is reason to suspect the sincerity of the French to conclude a peace with the empire. Their late memorial on that subject did not meet with general belief. Opinions, however, are various. Some view it as the forerunner of a sudden peace; whilst others, who pretend to understand matters more profoundly, assert that a new breach between this government and the French republic will take place. And it is certain, that the reinforcements of both parties continue still in Italy, while the courier for public dispatches between Berlin and Paris is continually going and coming.

A courier from Admiral Nelson has arrived at Naples, in which he informs the English ambassador, Hamilton, that he would not leave the coast of Egypt, before he had destroyed entirely the remaining French vessels lying in Alexandria to prevent Gen. Buonaparte's retreat to Europe.

The latest dispatches received from Naples bring an account also of an unexpected insurrection of the inhabitants of Malta against the French, because they intended to rob them of the silver work and ornaments of the churches.

PARIS, September 4.

On the subject of encreasing our army with 200,000 men, the following proclamation, dictated by Chenier to the French people, was yesterday decreed:—Frenchmen, in the moment that the legislative body, the representatives of a happy people, recommend to you the necessity of enrolling yourselves, imperious circumstances demand of us to represent to you all the advantages which will result therefrom. It calls for 200,000 additional men to participate the honor of defending their country. This is not done with an idea of setting aside the desire of of peace, which is ardently wished: No—it wishes constantly for this happy event, when the sword shall remain among the trophies of this great nation, which may then be able to apply itself to agriculture, to science and to the encouragement of the fine arts. The clouds which darken the political horizon of Europe, cannot be too soon dispersed. France has made every sacrifice which humanity and honor warranted. In the midst of her glorious conquests, she has set to herself bounds; she has ceased to combat when she had it in her power to extend her victories. But if we must again have recourse to arms, the two constituted authorities of the republic will give the signal for victory. Hasten, therefore, Frenchmen, to join the army."

To day, we are assured, that in the harbors of the Mediterranean an embargo has been laid on all Turkish vessels. This, however, demands further confirmation.

Notwithstanding our republic Austria continues to make the most active exertions for war, it appears that the negociations on both sides are continued.

The return of our fleet, which left Brest, seems to be confirmed. Report says that in a certain latitude they met a British fleet of superior force.

The Contre Admiral La Crosse has arrived at Havre to take command of the ships there.

The British ambassador at Naples, sir W. Hamilton, had his hotel illuminated three nights successively on account of admiral Nelson's victory; on this occasion he gave large sums to the Lazarone, who in return cried, "Long live England and the British nation!" It is also said that the Neapolitan troops are preparing to enter the Roman republic.

Our ambassador at Madrid, citizen Guillemardet has made his appearance again at that court.

The young men which have been drafted in Belgium are supposed to amount to 40,000 men.

They write from Brussels that the expedition planned at Dunkirk against Ireland, will be reinforced by our armament from Havre.

The well-known citizen, and formerly representative in the Council of Five Hundred, Drouet, has been allowed a gratuity of 28,807 francs, as an indemnification for his losses during his imprisonment in Austria.

REGENBURG, October 4.

The General Van Staader, who is stationed at Friedburg, has issued orders, on the receipt of a Courier from Vienna to all the artillery contoned at Braunaw to join him immediately.—It is said that another body of 25,000 men, of the Imperial troops, are ordered to be stationed about Ulm.

Yesterday passed through here 2 Imperial regiments of cavalry of Ulialen.

Two Imperial Officers of distinction have been dispatched from hence as Couriers to Count Lehrbach at Rastadt.

We are assured that Gen. Hotze, who commanded in that part of Tyrol which borders on Graubunden, has received orders to enter that country immediately on the French troops advancing. If such an event should actually take place in the country of Graubunden, war on the part of Austria seems inevitable.

When the Russian fleet under vice admiral Uschakow at first appeared in the channel before Constantinople, his men received every kind of refreshments and the best provisions, by order of the Sublime Porte. The lately appointed Grand Vizier, Jussuph Pacha, who has already been twice before appointed to this station, was also formerly Turkish ambassador at the court of London, and is favorably disposed towards the British. The displacement of the late Grand Vizier, Mahamet Pacha, and the Muftis, both of whom, against the knowledge of the Divan, wished to see the expedition of the French in Egypt prosper, and are said to have sanctioned it, took place on the 31st of August; immediately after which the declaration of war against France was made by the Porte.

No doubt is at present entertained that a triple Alliance is formed between Russia, England, and the Porte.

General Buonaparte, after his landing in Egypt, issued a Proclamation, wherein he ordains that every soldier who is guilty of plundering or any other attrocity, or who of his own will levies contributions, shall be shot and every division shall be responsible for the irregularity of each individual member.—The authorised commissaries only are empowered to levy contributions for the army, and the money is to be placed immediately in the Military Chest.

The alterations which have taken place in the constitution of the Cisalpine republic, have produced here much sensation: Since both the Cisalpine counsellors declare that they had consented to these alterations of the French government. It is, therefore, considered here as an infringement of the sovereignty and independence of the Cisalpine republic, as also, decidedly against the 7th and 8th articles of Campio Formio. This circumstance has also lessened here the expectation of peace, and two couriers have lately been dispatched to our commandant in Italy.

We are anxious here to know what impression the continued representations of our ministers to those of France at Rastadt will produce: as it is therein stated that peace with all the powers combined against France ought to take place, as the situation and welfare of Europe demand it. It is also said that the Turkish ministry, who is so deeply interested, will declare itself on this point.

Last Thursday the Turkish ambassador accidentally passed one of the most populous squares of our city. The people, who had collected in clouds, clapped their hands, and cried, "Long live the Ottoman Porte."—The ambassador, not understanding this, was very uneasy: when, however, the cause was explained to him, he commanded his coach to stop, and alighted, and thanked the public in such an engaging manner, that it produced redoubled applause.

Apprehensions seem to increase that the Congress at Rastadt will not end amicably.

The house of Arteria & Co. are in possession of the portrait of the British admiral Nelson, taking from the original painting by Orme.

PHILADELPHIA,

WEDNESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 12.

This Day the Senate, in a body, waited on the President of the United States, and presented him the following

ANSWER.

To the PRESIDENT of the UNITED STATES.

SIR,

THE Senate of the United States join you in thanks to Almighty God for the removal of the late afflicting dispensations of his Providence, and for the PATRIOTIC SPIRIT, and general prosperity of our country. Sympathy for the sufferings of our fellow-citizens, from disease, and the important interests of the Union, demand of the national legislature a ready co-operation with the State governments, in the use of such means as seem best calculated to prevent the return of this fatal calamity.

Although we have sincerely wished that an adjustment of our differences with the republic of France might be effected on safe and honorable terms, yet the information you have given us of the ultimate failure of the negociation has not surprized us. In the general conduct of that Republic, we have seen a design of universal influence, incompatible with the self government, and destructive of the independence of other states. In its conduct towards these United States, we have seen a plan of hostility pursued with unremitted constancy, equally disregarding the obligations of treaties, and the rights of individuals. We have seen two embassies formed for the purpose of mutual explanations, and clothed with the most extensive and liberal powers, dismissed without recognition, and even without a hearing.

The government of France has not only refused to repeal, but has recently enjoined the observance of its former edict, respecting merchandize of British fabric or produce, the property of neutrals, by which, the interruption of our lawful commerce, and the spoliation of the property of our citizens have again received a public sanction—These facts indicate no change of system or disposition—they speak a more intelligible language than professions of solicitude to avoid a rupture, however ardently made. But, if after the repeated proofs we have given of a sincere desire for peace, these professions should be accompanied by insinuations, implicating the integrity with which it has been pursued—If neglecting and passing by the constitutional and authorized agents of the government they are made through the medium of individuals without public character or authority—and above all, if they carry with them a claim to prescribe the political qualifications of the minister of the United States, to be employed in the negotiation, they are not entitled to attention or consideration, but ought to be regarded as designed to separate the people from their government, and to bring about by intrigue that which open force could not effect.

We are of opinion with you, Sir, that there has nothing yet been discovered in the conduct of France which can justify a relaxation of the means of defence adopted during the last session of Congress, the happy result of which is so strongly and generally marked. If the force by sea and land which the existing laws authorise should be judged inadequate to the public defence, we will perform the indispensable duty of bringing forward such other acts as will effectually call forth the resources and force of our country.

A steady adherence to this wise and manly policy—a proper direction of the noble spirit of patriotism which has arisen in our country and which ought to be cherished and invigorated by every branch of the government, will secure our liberty and independence against all open and secret attacks.

We enter on the business of the present session with an anxious solicitude for the public good, and shall bestow that consideration on the several objects pointed out in your communication, which they respectively merit.

Your long and important services—your talents and firmness so often displayed in the most trying times and most critical situations, afford a sure pledge of a zealous co-operation in every measure necessary to secure us justice and respect.

To which the President made the following

REPLY:

To the SENATE of the UNITED STATES

GENTLEMEN,

I thank you for this address, so conformable to the spirit of our constitution, and the established character of the Senate of the United States, for wisdom, honor and virtue.

I have seen no real evidence of any change of system or disposition in the French republic, towards the United States. Although the officious interference of individuals, without public character or authority, is not entitled to any credit, yet it deserves to be considered, whether that temerity and impertinence of individuals, affecting to interfere in public affairs, between France and the United States, whether by their secret correspondence, or otherwise, and intended to impose upon the people, and seperate them from their government, ought not to be inquired into and corrected.

I thank you, Gentlemen, for your assurances that you will bestow that consideration on the several objects, pointed out in my communication, which they respectively merit.

If I have participated in that understanding, sincerity and constancy, which have been displayed by my fellow-citizens and countrymen, in the most trying times and critical situations, and fulfilled my duties to them, I am happy. The testimony of the Senate of the United States, in my favor, is an high and honorable reward, which receives, as it merits, my grateful acknowledgements. My zealous co-operation, in measures necessary to secure us justice and consideration, may be always depended on.

JOHN ADAMS.

Philadelphia, December 12, 1798.

MR. FENNO,

I observe several pieces in Mr. Brown's paper of last evening in reply to Mr. Cobbett's attack upon me—As Mr. Cobbett has heretofore thought proper to ascertain the authors of anonymous pieces, he may take the same liberty again. I therefore think proper to declare publicly that I am not the author of those pieces nor do I know who is.—When any attack shall be made upon me which will require my answer, it will not be given by anonymous publications—My defence will be accompanied by my name; but as yet I have discovered no occasion for defence. A fact is stated in the piece signed "Clitus" which has proceeded I suppose from a declaration I have made to several of my friends—I have declared and I now declare, that I have never shaken hands with Wm. Cobbett in my life. In August last, just as I was about leaving the Washington tavern, Mr. C. came up. As he stood in the piazza, and I by my sulky at some distance from the door, the salutation of "How do you do Sir," passed between us—I know not who gave it first, nor is it very material. A few words then passed which I believe, were on the then recent conduct of Mr. Thomas, and I drove off. JOSEPH HOPKINSON.

In the House of Representatives of this state, a motion has been made for the appointment of a committee to prepare and report a respectful address to the President of the United States, expressive of their entire approbation of his administration.

Savannah, October 30th, 1798.

GENTLEMEN,

The Corporation of this City have desired me to transmit to your Worshipful Body, Two Thousand Dollars, for the benefit of their distressed fellow citizens of Philadelphia. This small sum is a part of certain liberal donations to the citizens of this place who suffered by the fires in the months of November and December 1796. There will be sent on by the same class of people, in the course of a few days, a further sum of about one thousand dollars.

The citizens of Savannah, besides claiming to participate their full share of the sensations naturally excited by the calamities with which your city has been visited,—are feelingly alive to the generous and humane conduct of the Legislature of your state, and the inhabitants of Philadelphia, in the hour of their distress; and have only to regret that these their feeble efforts towards alleviating the sufferings of their afflicted brethren of Philadelphia, have not been earlier exerted.

Notwithstanding the citizens of Savannah are aware of the resources of your city, and are apprized of the notification of your committee of health; yet they cannot deny themselves the pleasure of acknowledging their good will; and of begging your acceptance of this small boon in behalf of such distressed families, as may have felt the afflicting hand of Providence in the course of the summer and fall.

A subscription has been opened for the inhabitants of this city to contribute generally. It is expected that the proceeds of it will ready to be sent on in a few days.

On behalf of the Corporation of Savannah, I have the honor to be

Gentlemen

With very great respect,

Your most obedient servant,

MATTHEW M'ALLISTER,

Mayor of the City of Savannah.

The Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Philadelphia.

From the COLUMBIAN MIRROR.

NUMBER VI.

TO THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA.

Fellow Citizens,

ANXIOUS for multiplying objections against the Sedition Law, the remonstrance states, "that a law thus penal ought to have been deferred in its operation until it could be promulgated—a law which encounters rooted prepossessions in favor of the freedom of the press ought to have been ranked among legislative experiments," &c.

If it introduced a new offence, or if it introduced new penalties, I agree it should have been promulgated before it went into operation. But neither the offences nor penalties are new, as has been fully demonstrated. Previous to the law the offences were known to exist under the appellation of misdemeanors, for which fine and imprisonment were the usual penalties. Indeed the penalties at common law are under the discretion of the courts, but being now limited by the act of congress, so that the fine may not exceed a certain sum of money, nor the imprisonment a certain space of time, the law seems entitled rather to the praise of moderation and lenity than to the censure of harshness and severity.

But why, if unconstitutional, should a distant day have been appointed for its operation? or why rank it among legislative experiments? If unconstitutional, it is void, and never can have effect—if unconstitutional, it never should be a legislative experiment. What do we see in this remonstrance?—men professing an affectionate regard for the constitution, denouncing a law as a violation of it, and at the same time avowing the sentiment that this law, this violation of the constitution, should have been a legislative experiment. Far different ought to be the sentiment of my fellow-citizens. They should consider the constitution as the sacred palladium of their and their children's rights—Let it not be violated directly or indirectly—let it not be destroyed either by open violence or insurrection, or undermined by sophistry and misconstruction. The means of destruction, whether of the one sort or of the other, should be abhorred—There is more to fear from the latter than from the former. There is more to fear from a doctrine that denies to it the rights of self preservation, and dwindles it into imbecility and nothingness, than from open rebellion.

Moreover the remonstrance, pursuing this objection, endeavours to enforce it by saying that the Sedition Law ought the have been ranked among legislative experiments instead of being retained in force for more than two years and a half longer than perhaps the existence of the exigency which countenanced its birth, but long enough for one party to pervert it to the vexation, persecution and impoverishment of its political enemies." Here I will observe, if there is any fault in the law, it must be that its duration is limited at all. The offences which it punishes should always be punished, and therefore the law, if it were necessary, should not have been temporary, but perpetual. Perhaps the law was not indispensably necessary, because without it the same misdemeanors were punishable, and after its expiration will be punishable by the judicial power of the United States, as they are all cases "at law arising under the constitution" of the United States. Many things not necessary may be expedient and so this law may be ultimately found.

To agitate and inflame you yet more, it is asserted in the remonstrance, that "the law will be long enough in force for one party to pervert it, to the vexation, persecution, and impoverishment of its political enemies"—that though "the right of giving in evidence the truth of a libel, is a protection to the accused, it will in the most important instances be a vision instead of a substance," and because with the firmness of freemen, the remonstrants adhere to respect for office, they will not descend to the painful task of suggesting how this may be done, and probably will happen." Indecent and unjust as this attack is upon the Judiciary of our country, my respect to the people of the state whom I address, shall restrain the indignation which it has excited. In offering to the public my ideas on the two laws, which have been misconceived by too many of my fellow-citizens faithfully and affectionately attached to the American government, and which, by a few restless, unhappy, disappointed, and mischievous individuals, have been grosly misrepresented, for the worst of purposes, it was my determination to be silent upon such assertions and insinuations as I have just recited—in that determination I persist. For us all it may be a source of inestimable felicity, that the administration of the Judiciary department is placed with judges, whose experience, learning, and integrity make them an ornament and blessing to our common country and who will never permit any law to be perverted to the vexation or oppression of any of us.

VIRGINIENSIS.

The celebrated EDMUND BURKE's opinion of the people of New-England, in one of his speeches delivered in the British Parliament in the year 1775.

"As to the wealth which the colonies have drawn from the sea by their fisheries, you had all that matter fully opened at your bar. You surely thought those acquisitions of value, for they seemed even to excite your envy; and yet the spirit with which that enterprising employment has been exercised, ought rather, in my opinion, to have raised your esteem and admiration. And pray, sir, what in the world is equal to it? Pass by the other parts, and look at the manner in which the people of New-England have of late carried on the whale fishery. Whilst we follow them among the rumbling mountains of ice, and behold them penetrating into the deepest frozen recesses of Hudson's bay, and Davis's straights; whilst we are looking for them beneath the artic circle, we hear that they have pierced into the opposite region of polar cold, that they are at the antipodes, and engaged under the frozen serpent of South-Falkland Island, which seemed too remote and romantic an object for the grasp of national ambition, is but a stage and resting place in the progress of their victorious industry. Nor is the equinoxial heat more discouraging to them, than the accumulated winter of both the poles. We know that whilst some of them draw the line and strike the harpoon on the coast of Africa, others run the longitude, and pursue their gigantic game along the coast of Brazil. No sea but what is vexed by their fisheries; no climate that is not witness to their toils. Neither the perseverance of Holland, nor the activity of France, nor the dexterous and firm sagacity of English enterprise, ever carried this most perilous mode of hardy industry to the extent to which it has been pushed by this recent people; a people who are still, as it were, but in the gristle, and not hardened in the bone of manhood. When I contemplate those things, when I know that the colonies in general owe little or nothing to any care of ours, and that they are not squeezed into this happy form by the constraints of watchful and suspicious governments, but that through a wise and salutary neglect, a generous nature has been suffered to take her own way to perfection; when I reflect upon these effects, when I see how profitable they have been to us, I feel all the pride of power sink, and all presumption in the wisdom of human contrivances, melt and die away within me!"

CONGRESS.

In the House of Representatives of the United States, on motion of Mr. Harper, it was resolved that a committee be appointed to enquire and report, whether any, and what amendments are necessary to the act laying duties on stamped parchment, vellum, and paper.

Mr. Harper's resolution for printing copies of the alien and sedition laws, was then called for.—In some observations which passed upon this subject, Mr. Nicholas declared his intention of moving for a repeal of these laws, early in the present session.

Mr. Dawson, having asked if it was in order, moved, that the consideration of this resolution be postponed for one month. As it was understood that an effort would soon be made for a repeal of these laws, he was of opinion it would be proper to await the issue of the attempt, before a measure of this kind was agreed to.

This gentleman's motion however was disagreed to.

The blank in the resolution was then filled with 20,000, and the resolution itself, after undergoing an opposition from Mr. Gallatin, postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. Dana, from the Committee appointed for the purpose, reported the form of an answer to the Speech of the President, which, having been twice read, was committed to a Committee of the whole House for to-morrow.

The New-York Gazette of Monday contains the following account.

Ship Deborah, of Philadelphia, Edward Yard, master, from St. Croix, is stranded on Racoon Beach. Long Island—vessel lost, and the greater part of her cargo. The people saved. She was laden with sugar and Madeira wine.

A CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

JOHN A. SHAEFFER, of Philadelphia, who has for a few years past been in the southern States, has had the effrontery to draw several Bills of Exchange on Timothy Pickering, Esq. Secretary of State, and myself, and by that means has defrauded a number of persons of their money, deceiving them by an exhibition of letters and papers with the names affixed of divers public characters and reputable merchants highly recommendatory of said Shaeffer; to one of these papers I find my name subscribed, but I do not know the man; these are villainous forgeries! To prevent further imposition, I have to request the printers of Newspapers in the United States to publish this for the benefit of their fellow-citizens.

SAMUEL MEREDITH,
Treasurer of the United States.

Trenton, New-Jersey,
